Trail Rangers

The first camp of the Trail Rangers in Chauvin gathered at their rooms in the basement of Westminster Church on Friday, October 22nd at 8 p.m. After the opening ceremonies the minister, T. B. Wetmore started the organization by a talk on the nature and goals of the "Trail Rangers" Boys Club for the benefit of the boys and their dads there assembled.

This was followed by a period of sport and tricks, continuing until the camp lunch was ready and the boys and their dads sat down together. Here a toast to the boys was proposed by Mr. Gish, principal of the high school and responded to in a number of speeches from the senior members present.

At the close came the election of officers. Mr. Arthur Harris was the unanimous choice of the boys for Chief Ranger and Mr. Roy (Continued on page 4)

ERADICATE DIPHTHERIA

A Valuable Article On Prevention and Control of Diphtheria That Should be Read and Kept by every Householder

Diphtheria is essentially a children's disease, picking its victims chiefly during childhood and to a less extent in early adult life. It is always a serious disease, and not uncommonly a fatal one. It frequently kills, maims or cripples its victims, chiefly young children. Its onset is insidious. There is no alarming rash, such as is seen in smallpox or scarlet fever to indicate the malignancy of the disease. There is ordinarily no prostration at the beginning, such as is seen in pneumonia to indicate the seriousness of infection.

A small grayish white patch on the child's throat is usually the first sign of the disease, and at this stage the child does not appear to be very sick. In some instances the first indication of illness is an obstruction to breathing caused by the growth of diphtheria membrane in the child's breathing passages. At this time the choking, gasping efforts to breathe terrify the child and the parents, but unfortunately the stage for favourable treatment has passed.

During the years 1920-1924 inclusive there were 3,906 cases of diphtheria in Alberta. Of these 587 or 15 per cent died from the disease.

Of those who died 43 were under one year 158 were between 1-4 years old and 351 were between 5 and 14 years of age. 94 per cent of the deaths occurred under 15 years.

The gravity of the situation, is not due alone to the substantial number of deaths. While an attack of diphtheria is often mild and associated with comparatively little prostration,—except in those cases in which the growth of the diphtheria membrane in the air passages literally chokes the child to death,—the complications which accompany, and follow diphtheria frequently have serious consequences. Various types of paralysis may occur which leave the child crippled for life; mastoiditis, abscesses of the nose and throat, and other otic infections, may cause protracted or permanent disability; heart disease and other chronic complications which may persist for a long period—not uncommonly for life—may result in seriously handicapping disability in later life.

LEONARD PRICE MEETS WITH PAINFUL ACCIDENT

Leonard Price met with a painful accident recently which will disable him for a few weeks.

We are informed that Mr. Price was standing ready to help hitch a tractor to a stump while the former was backed into place and just as it reached the correct position it came to a depression in the ground and ran back further than was expected in such a manner that it caught his foot under the rear wheel and cut it open, at the same time dislocating his shoulder.

It's a good job hens don't know how much men get for laying bricks.

Poppy Day

Armistice Day, November 11,

The objects of the Campaign are forefold.

Primarily it is to honor our fallen soldiers and show that we as citizens do not forget. This tribute is paid on this day in all nations of the Allies.

Secondly, the greater display of poppies means increased employment to our disabled soldiers in Alberta who make up these poppies. All poppies sold in Alberta by the Legion have been made in Alberta.

Thirdly Whatever organization acts for the Legion, can raise a fund which can only be used for local relief or charitable purposes. Fourthly a small profit is made by the Legion which helps in a small measure the Legion's expense in handling the hundreds of adjustment cases of deserving disabled widows or dependents.

Control of the fish and game in the state of Ohio is being sought by a commission composed of five experts on game conservation. This industry is at present in the hands of the Department of Agriculture. The proposal will be placed before the government by the game and fish leagues in Ohio, the belief being that the existence of such a commission would be in accordance with the growing importance of the fish and game industry in that state.

CHAPTER XLIV

Yet If Love Lack

Winding down out of the hills into the grassy valley of the Upper Sacramento, the little pack train of Banion and Jackson, six hardy mules beside the black horse and Jackson's mountain pony, picked its way along a gashed and trampled creek bed. The kyacks which swung heavy on the strongest two mules might hold salt or lead or gold. It all was one to any who might have seen, and the two silent men, the younger ahead, the older behind obviously were men able to hold their counsel or to defend their property.

The smoke of a distant encampment caught the keen eye of Jackson as he rode, humming, care-free, the burden of a song.

"Oh, then, Susannah!" admonished the old mountain man, and bade the said Susannah to be as free of care as he himself then and there was.

"More men comin' in," said he presently. "Wonder who them people is, an' ef hit's peace er war."

"Three men. A horse band. Two Indians. Go in easy, Bill."

Banion slowed down his own gait. His companion had tied the six mules together, nose and tail, with the halter of the lead mule wrapped on his own saddle horn. Each man now drew his rifle from the swing loop. But they advanced with the appearance of confidence for it was evident that they had been discovered by the men of the encampment.

Apparently they were identified as well as discovered. A tall man in leggings and moccasins, ins, a flat felt hat over his long gray hair, stood gazing at them his rifle butt resting on the ground. Suddenly he emitted an unearthly yell, whether of defiance or of greeting, and springing to his own horse's picket pin gathered in the lariat, and mounting bareback came on, his rifle high above his head, and repeating again and again his war cry or salutation.

Jackson rose in his stirrups, dropped his lead line and foresook more than a hundred and fifty thousand dollars some two mule-pack loads of gold. His own yell rose high in answer.

"I told ye all the world'd be here!" he shouted back over his shoulder. "Do-ee see that old thief Jim Bridger? Him I left drunk an' happy last summer? Now what in hell brung him here?"

The two old mountain men flung off and stood hand in hand before Banion had rescued the precious line and brought on the little train.

Bridger threw his hat on the ground, flung down his rifle and cast his stoic calm aside. Both his hands caught Banion's and his face beamed, breaking into a thousand lines.

"Boy, hit's you, then! I knowed yer hoss—he has no like in these parts. I've traced ye by him this hundred miles below an' up agin, but I've no word this two weeks. Mostly I've seed that, when ye ais't lookin' fer a b'ar, thar he is. Well, here we air, fine an' fitten, an' me with two bottles left o' somethin' they call coggnae down in Yerba Buena. Come on in an' we'll make medicine."

They dismounted. The two Indians, short, deep-chested, bow-legged men went to the packs. They grunted as they unloaded the two larger mules.

The kyacks were lined up and the mantas spread over them, the animals led away for feed and water. Bridger produced a ham of venison, some beans, a bannock and some coffee—not to mention two bottles of fiery fluid—before any word was passed regarding future plans or past events.

"Come here, Jim," said Jackson after a time, tin cup in hand. The other followed him, likewise equipped.

"Heft this panier Jim."

Uh-huh? Well what of hit? What's inter hit?

Now, little by little, they told, each to the other, the story of the months since they had met, Bridger first explaining his own movements.

"Not much, Jim. Jest three-four hundred pounds o' gold settin' there in them four packs. Hit ain't much, but hit'll help some."

Bridger stooped and uncovered the kyacks, unbuckled the cover straps.

"Hit's a true fack!" he exclaimed. "Gold! Eef hit ain't I'm a putrified liar, an' that's all I got to say!"

"I left the Malheur at Boise, an' brusg along yan two boys. Ye needn't be a-skeered they'll touch the cargo. The gold means nothin' ter 'em but horses does. We've got a good band ter drive north now. Some we bought an' most they stole, but no rancher cares fer horses here an' now."

"We come through the Klamaths, ye see, an' on south—the old horse trail up from the Spanish country, which only the Injuns knows. My boys say they kin take us ter the head o' the Willamette."

"So ye did get the gold! Eh, sir?" said Bridger, his eyes narrowing. "The tip the gal give ye was a good one?"

"Yes," rejoined Banion. "But we came near losing it and more. It was Sam Woodhull, Jim. He followed us in."

"Yes, I know. His wagons was not fur behind ye on the Humboldt. He left right atter ye did. He made trouble, huh? He'll make no more? Is that hit, huh?"

Bill Jackson slapped the stock of his rifle in silence. Bridger nodded. He had been close to tragedies all his life. They told him now of this one. He nodded again, close lipped.

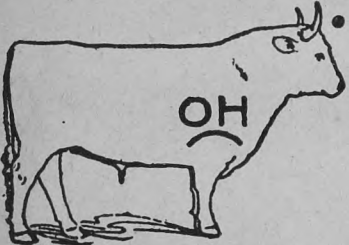

"An' ye wants courts an' settlements, boys?" said he. "Fer me, when I kill a rattler, that's nough. Ef ye're touchy an' want yer ree-cord clean, why, we kin go below an' fix hit. Only thing is I don't want ter waste no more time'n I kin help fer some o' them horses has ree-cord that ain't maybe so plumb clean their own selves. Ye ain't goin' out

OUR REPORTS OF LIVE STOCK

British labour conditions have been far reaching in their effect. The coal strike in particular has resulted in a somewhat slacker demand for our live stock and its products. Still, the sales for the year up to the end of August have been greater for all except hogs than for the corresponding period of 1925. The figures given by the monthly review of the Dominion Live Stock Branch are: cattle, 539,155 compared with 499,046; calves 228,726 compared with 204,829 and sheep 132,045 compared with 119,028. Hogs show a decline from 876,564 to 660,984. Prices have been well sustained and heifers, cows, stockers and feeders, calves and sheep show an improvement. Hogs are a couple of dollars up compared with 1924, but a little down as compared with last year's quotations.

Exports to Britain this year compared with those of last year have been: cattle 59,423 compared with 63,445; beef 1,676,600 lbs compared with 5,258,000 lbs; bacon 59,450,700 lbs compared with 85,665,700 lbs; pork, 3,541,400 lbs compared with 6,250,900 lbs. Exports to the United States show an increase this year compared with last of 37,955 cattle to 26,898; 49,773 calves to 49,284; of 8,282,300 lbs of beef to 5,171,900 lbs; and of 63,600 lbs of mutton to 43,800 lbs. In bacon and pork there has been a decline, particularly in the latter which fell away from 5,240,900 lbs to 3,139,701 lbs.

Save money—time and bother of sending back unsatisfactory goods by dealing at Saker's.

SELECT BACON FROM SCOTT

The summer experiments in hog feeding at the Scott Experimental Station were recently closed and a shipment was made to a packing plant in Edmonton. There were 54 pure bred Yorkshire hogs on feeding trials. Nineteen of the choice sows were held for breeding purposes, the greater number of which had previously been sold to farmers in the district and the remainder were held for use at the Experimental Farm.

Of the 35 which were shipped with a mixed car of stock there were two over weight for select bacon and eight below the required weight on account of being a little younger. The remaining 25 all graded "select" and the 10 per cent premium amounted to $61.87 for the twentyfive or $2.47 per head extra profit realized by having the desired type.

There has been a marked increase in the percentage of select hogs grown in Canada during the last five years and on account of the unlimited market for this type of hog the general hog market will be stabilized as the percentage of select bacon hogs increases.

To those who appreciate good tea we can recommend Saker's "Yellow Packet."

CURING SEED CORN

(Experimental Farms Note)

Corn shows held in Saskatchewan and Alberta during recent years have demonstrated the possibilities of saving and curing seed corn in the Prairie Provinces. The demand for domestic seed is shown by the higher prices offered, but to date very little is available on the market.

Ears of flint corn which reach dents formed, in the case of dent varieties can be satisfactorily saved for seed. Small quantities of several varieties have been been picked at these stages and mental Farm, Indian Head. Over twenty bushels of seed corn of a selection of North Dakota White Flint cut at this stage last year gave one hundred per cent germination at planting time. This seed came up in the spring one to two days before imported seed and made more rapid progress in the early part of the season.

Great care must be exercised in curing the product. Corn picked at this stage contains over thirty per cent moisture and cannot be bulked, even in a crib or it will spoil. These ears must be cured in a room with a good circulation of air, arranged so as not to touch one another, and with temperatures as high above freezing as convenient.

Several methods have been used to complete this curing process. The most convenient method, which allows handling a relatively large amount of corn in a small space, is the chicken-wire method. The wire is tightly strung on both sides of two-by-fours made into frames to suit the room space. Into this wire the ears are thrust. Where only a small quantity is cured the ears may be tied by the husks and suspended from the ceiling. Husked ears may be hung in parallel lines of looped string and the strings crossed as each ear is dropped in place. Intending exhibitors at the forthcoming shows should cure the seed to avoid formation of moulds while the corn is in transit. The ears should then be wrapped separately and shipped in a tight wooden box.

A sale is not a sale at Saker's until the customer is fully satisfied.

DEHORN COMMERCIAL CATTLE

(Experimental Farm Note)

Horns are expensive and harmful ornaments for commercial cattle. The market demand call for an animal without horns and the only place where the presence of horns can be justified is in the show ring or in stables where each animal is tied.

In an investigation conducted at a western packing plant, in which the cattle receipts covering a period of six weeks were examined, it was found that from 23 to 39 per cent of all cattle delivered were bruised, four fifths of which were badly bruised from the effects of horn goring. Many of these carcasses were so badly damaged that they were only fit for the second class meat trade. The packers protect themselves against

INCREDIBLE VALUE

Reports from all provinces indicate that the Family Herald and Weekly Star of Montreal, at the price of $1.00 per year, is sweeping the country.
At the price of $1.00 a year, this big weekly journal is the marvel of the newspaper world.
Notwithstanding the reduction in price (from $2.00 to $1.00) every big feature of this great paper has been faithfully maintained, and the publishers are to make improvements.

When one takes into consideration the huge volume, wide variety and high quality of the reading matter in every issue of the Family Herald, the question uppermost in the reader's mind is,
"how can it be produced at the price?" It is a combination of a complete farm journal, family ily magazine and weekly newspaper—at a cost of less than TWO CENTS weekly.

Winter is rapidly approaching
For this coming winter's reading there is no better combination than your own local paper and the Family Herald and Weekly Star.

Nova Scotia Noted For Its Hunting Facilities

Reports of excellent big game hunting in Nova Scotia this season have been received at the tourist department of the Canadian Pacific Railway in Montreal. Hunters have returned with tales of super-moose, seemingly endowed with more than usual cunning, thus adding to the interest in this sport. A large section of the interior is a maze of beautiful lakes, woods and streams where moose are plentiful despite the fact that about 1,200 bulls are killed by hunters each year between October 1st and November 15th, the open season. Cow moose and young calves are protected. Water approaches to the hunting grounds are but a short motor-ride from Digby and Annapolis Royal on the Dominion Atlantic Railway.

Many hunters penetrate the wilderness by canoe from south Milford at the head of the Liverpool chain of lakes, or by motor truck which transports hunters, guides, duffel and canoes to Kedgemakookee and other haunts of the moose. Some of the best guides are the Micmac Indians, there being also plenty of efficient white guides at Del Thomas's South Milford Camp and Kedgemakookee.

But one bull moose may be bagged each season by a hunter. The majority of moose are killed each year in 13 of the 18 counties. Moose and caribou are plentiful on Cape Breton Island but the hunting of these animals at the present time is prohibited on the island. Bear and wildcat, for which there is no closed season, roam the woods of Nova Scotia. Ruffed grouse, woodcock, snipe, wild geese and many other varieties of small game are plentiful and afford the hunter every opportunity of an excellent hunting holiday. The province too is a mecca for the angler. The many streams and abound with salmon and trout. The coast tuna, cod, haddock, pollock and flounder fishing is extensively indulged in.

Human Flies Scale C.P.R. Chimney

Walking around a two-foot-wide platform that encircled the top of the 218-foot-high chimney at the end of the Windsor street station train platforms, Henry Held, of New York, and Richard Boucher, of Three Rivers, drew many eyes from neighboring streets and from the windows of the C.P.R. offices. The men had been engaged by the company to repoint the bricks, clean the surface and repair the lighting rods on the huge chimney.

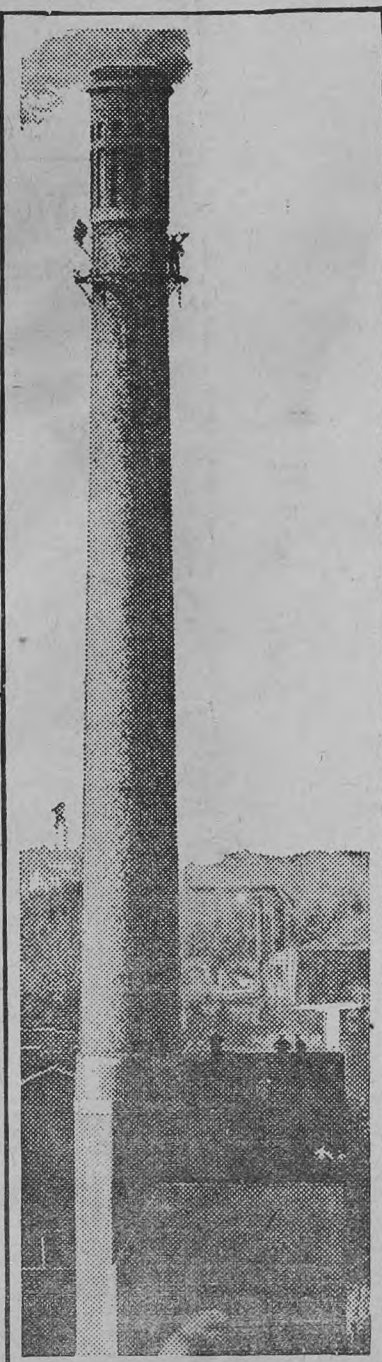

The work of getting the platform to the top of the chimney occupied the men for eight days. Every upward movement of the platform was to a height of six feet and at the last minute of completing this work one of the men would be standing on a single plank, the rest having been raised to the upper position. This ticklish work was to the on-looker dangerous in the extreme, but the men thought nothing of it.

Asked if he ever suffered from attacks of vertigo, Held laughed and said he never had. "I feel just as safe up there as I do on the ground." He is a man over sixty years of age and has been doing this kind of work for the past forty years. "I feel right at home on the C.P.R. chimney," he added, "for I built it in 1912." However, he is thinking of quitting in another couple of years, although his nerve is as good as ever it was. He owns a half-section of land in Alberta and it is there that he says he will settle down.

Both men moved with the same ease at the perilous height as though they were walking on the street. At times, when hauling a plank upwards, one of them stooped over the edge of the platform looking sheer down the drop of 200 feet. At other times they swung out from the walls of the chimney perched on a tiny cradle. At all times they appeared to have complete mastery of the situation.

Although it took them eight days to hoist the platform to its present position, they glided from it to the ground on a cradle in slightly less than a minute.

east—ye're goin' north. Hit's easier, an' a month er two closer, with plenty o' feed an' water—the old Cayuse trail, huh?"

"So Sam Woodhull got what he's been lookin' fer so long!" he added presently. "Well, that simples up things some."

"He'd o' got hit long ago, on the Platte, ef my partner hadn't been a damned fool," confirmed Jackson. "He was where we could a' buried him nach'erl, in the sands. I told Will that Woodhull'd murder him the fust chancet he got. Well, he did—er ef he didn't hit wasn't no credit either o' them two."

"What differ does hit make, Bill?" remarked Bridger indifferently. "Let bygones be bygones huh? That's the pleasant way sence he's dead."

"Now here we air, with all the gold there ever was molded, an' a hull two bottles o' coggnae left, which takes holt e'namost better's Hudson's Bay rum. Ain't it a perty leetle ol' world to play with, all with nice pink stripes erroun' hit?"

He filled his tin and broke into a roaring song:

There was a ol' widder which had three sons—

Joshuway, James an' John.

An' one got shot, an' one got drowned,

An' th' last un got losted an' never was found—

"Ain't it funny, son," said he turning to Banion with cup up-lifted. "how stiff likker allus makes me remember what I done fergot? Now Kit told me, thar at Laramie."

"Fer I'm goin' out to Oregon, with my wash pan on my knee!" chanted Bill Jackson, now solemnly oblivious of most of his surroundings and hence not consciously discourteous to his friends; "Susannah, don't ye cry!"

They sat, the central figure of a scene wild enough, in a world still primitive and young. Only one of the three remained sober and silent, wondering, if one thing lacked, why the world was made.

CHAPTER XLV

The Light of The Whole World

At the new farm of Jesse Wingate on the Yamhill the wheat was in stack and ready for the flail, his deer-skin sacks made ready to carry it to market after the threshing. His grim and weather-beaten wagon stood, now unused, at the barnyard fence of rails.

It was evening. Wingate and his wife again sat on their little stoop, gazing down the path that led to the valley road. A mounted man was opening the gate, someone hey did not recognize.

"Maybe from below," said Molly Wingate. "Jed's maybe sent up another letter. Leave it to him, he's going to marry the most wonderful girl! Well, I'll call it true, she's a wonderful walker All the Prieses was."

"Or maybe it's for Molly," she added. "Ef she's ever heard a word from either Sam Woodhull or—"

"Hush! I do not want to hear bat name—" broke in her husband "Trouble enough he has made for us!"

His wife made no comment for a moment, still watching the stranger, who was now riding up the long approach, little noted by Wingate as he sat, moody and distraught.

"Jess," said she, "Let's be fair and shame the devil. Maybe we don't know all the truth about Will Banion. You go in the house I'll tend to this man whoever he may be."

But she did not. With one more look at the advancing figure she herself rose and followed her husband. As she passed she cast a wift glance at her daughter, who had not joined them for the twilight hour. Hers was the look of the mother—maternal, solicitous, yet wise and resolved without; woman understanding woman. And now was the hour for her ewe lamb to be alone.

Molly Wingate sat in her own little room, looking through her window at the far forest and the mountain peaks in their evening dress of many colors. She was no longer the tattered emigrant girl in fringed frock and mended moccasins. Ships from the world's great ports served the new market of the Columbia Valley. It was a trim and trig young woman in the habiliments of sophisticated lands who sat here now, her heavy hair, piled high, lighted warmly in the illumination of the window. Her skin, clear white, had lost its sunburn in the moister climate between the two ranges of mountains. Quiet, reticent, reserved—cold some said; but all said Molly Wingate, teacher at the mission school, wa beautiful, the most beautiful young woman in the Williamette settlements. Her hands were in her lap now, and her face as usual was grave. A sad young woman, her Oregon lovers all said of her. They did not know why she should be sad so fit for love was she.

She heard now a knock at the front door, to which, from her position, she could not have seen anyone approach. She called out, "Come!" but did not turn her head.

A horse stamped, neighed near her door. Her face changed expression. Her eyes grew wide in some strange association of memories suddenly revived.

She heard a footfall on the gallery floor, then on the floor of the hall. It stopped. Her heart almost stopped with it. Some undiscovered sense warned her, cried aloud to her. She faced the door, wide-eyed, as it was flung open.

"Molly!"

Will Banion's deep-toned voice told her the rest. In terror, her hands to her face, she stood an instant, then sprang toward him, her voice almost a wail in its incredulous joy.

"Will! Will! Oh, Will! Oh! Oh!"

"Molly!"

They both paused.

"It can't be! Oh, you frightened me, Will! It can't be you!"

But he had her in his arms now. At first he could only push back her hair, stroke her cheek, until at last the rush of life and youth came back to them both and their lips met in the sealing kiss of years. There both were young again. She put up a hand to caress his brown cheek. Tenderly he pushed back her hair.

"Will! Oh, Will! It can't be! Now I'm paid! Now I've found my fortune!"

"And I've had my year to think it over, Will. As though fortune mattered!"

"Not so much as that one other thing that kept you and me apart. Now I must tell you—"

"No, no, let be! Tell me nothing! Will, aren't you here?"

"But I must! You must hear me! I've waited two years for this!"

"Long, Will! You've let me row old!"

"You old?" He kissed her in contempt of time. "But now wait, dear, for I must tell you."

"You see, comin up the valley I met the Clerk of th Court of Oregon City, and he knew I was headed up for the Yamhill. He asked me to serve as his messesger. 'I've been sending up through all the valley settlements in search of one, William Banion,' he said to me. Then I told him who I was. He gave me this."

"What is it?" she turned to her lover. He held in his hands a long package, enfolded in an otter skin. Is it a court summons for Will Banion? They can't have you, Will!"

He smiled, her head held between his two hands.

"I have a very important document for Colonel William Banion," the clerk said to me. 'It has been for some time in our charge for delivery to him at once should he come into the Oregon settlements. It is from his Excellency, the President of the United States. Sue messages do not wait. Seeing it of such importance, and knowing it to be military, Judge Lamb opened it, since we could not trace the addressee. If you like—if you are, indeed, Colonel William Banion'—that was what he said."

He broke off, choking.

"Ah, Molly, at last and indeed I am again William Banion!"

He took from the otter skin—which Chardos once had placed over the oilskin used by Carson to protect it—the long and formal envelope of heavy linen. His finger pointed—"On the Service of the United States."

"Why, Will!"

He caught the envelope swiftly to his lips, holding it there an instant before he could speak.

"My pardon! From the President! Not guilty—oh, not guilty!! And I never will!"

"Oh, Will, Will! That makes you happy"

"Doesn't it you?"

"Why, yes, yes! But I knew that always! And I know now thot I'd have followed you to the gallows if it had to be."

"Though I were a thief?"

"Yes! But I'd not believe it! I didn't! I never did! I could not!"

"You'd take my word against all the world—just my word, if I told you it wasn't true? You'd want no proof at all? Will you always believe in me in that way? No proof?"

"I want some now. You do tell me that? No, no! I'm afraid you'd give me proofs! I want none! I want to love you for what you are, for what we both are, Will! I'm afraid!"

He put his hands on her shoulders, held her away arms, length-looked straight into her eyes.

"Dear girl," said he, "you need need never be afraid any more."

She put her head down contentedly against his shoulder, her face nestling sidewise, her eyes closed, her arms again quite around his neck.

I don't care, Will," said she. "No, no, don't talk of things!"

He did not talk. In the sweetness of the silence he kissed her tenderly again and again.

And now the sun might sink. The light of the whole world by no means died with it.

DEHORN

loss by avoiding the horned animal as far as possible and buying at a lower figure when hornless animals are not available. This accounts for the fact that the hornless cattle sell more readily at a higher price than those having horns.

The man buying cattle for feed ing wants hornless cattle because they are more contented in the feed lot and consequently make more economical gains.

An experiment conducted at the Scott Experiment Farm, including 52 head of steers, shows an average of 44 pounds greater gains made per head made by hornless steers as compared with steers dehorned at the beginning of the feeding period. This shows the necessity of dehorning while young.

It is unwise to dehorn during hot weather but October or November is a very suitable time or in the spring before the flies appear. The most humane method is to treat the young calf with caustic potash when a few days old.

Reasons for dehorning:

1. Beter market returns.
2. Maximum results for feed consumed.
3. Quicker sales.
4. Contentment in the herd.
5. Fair play in the feed lot.
6. Easier handling.
6. Less shrinkage in transit.
8. No bruises to discount sales.

Write to the Scott Experimental Farm for Pamphlet regarding the dehorning of commercial cattle.

COMPLETING

GRAVELLED

HIGHWAYS

A completed gravelled highway from Edmonton to the international boundary by the end of 1927 is a possibility according to the program of the provincial highway department. The completion of the gravelled highway from Edmonton to Calgary will be carried out next summer, and the completion of the road south from Calgary to the boundary, some of which has already been year too, if possible.

The Melting Pot in the West

Pick where you will in this group and you will have difficulty in saying which of these girls comes of Russian, British or original Canadian stock. They are typical of the Prairie Provinces where all the nations of Europe come in and settle on the land. And when the next generation rises from the effort and struggle of the first settlers, they are all of them pure Canadian. Their outlook, their appearance, their speech are good British; the land has made them over in its own image. Take for instance the young woman at the left. She is the daughter of a Russian immigrant who came here when she was 12 years old. Another is a teacher from Manchester, England; two are the daughters of a Canadian editor and two others are the children of a Russian who came to Canada some years ago. Yet all alike to-day are typical Canadians.

A Canadian Pacific Romance

Whether or not it was the silvery voice alone of a pretty telephone operator in the London offices of the Canadian Pacific Railway, that wafted Robert White's spirit into the romantic realms of matrimony, is not definitely known. White, however, who is a member of the staff of the passenger department, has succumbed to the charms of Miss Dorothy Cook. She has been merrily answering calls in the phone room at the top of the same building for some time. In the course of his duties, Mr. White has naturally been compelled to ring Miss Cook daily. Some time ago he decided to "ring her" in a different manner. Miss Cook "answered the call" and the result is seen in the above photograph which shows Mr. and Mrs. White being presented with a lucky horseshoe immediately after their wedding which took place at Fulham, London, recently.

"LADY OF THE NIGHT" A PICTURE OF SOCIETY AT BEST AND WORST

No matter in what station of life one lives, emotions remain pretty much the same, according to the thesis of "Lady of the Night," which will be shown next Monday at Chauvin and Edgerton, Tuesday.

Monta Bell, director for Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer, has brought to the screen a powerful story of society at its highest and lowest level.

He has filmed the lives of two girls—one at the top, the other at the bottom of the social ladder—who fall in love with the same man.

That it is love of the deepest kind is shown when the spirit of sacrifice moves both of these girls when in the climax they have to choose between what they regard as their happiness and their duty.

Both elect to sacrifice their happiness.

The picture is said to be the best of the three excellent pictures which Monta Bell has directed.

Even mean people sometimes give themselves away.

Some people come to grief others wait for it to overtake them.

Diphtheria Prevention and Control Tntitoxin

When diphtheria antitoxin was put into use in 1895 man health authorities then felt that a relatively easy conquest of the disease would result. In that they were mistaken. Diphtheria antitoxin is effective as a cure only if given early. The disappointing feature about antitoxin has been its limited usefulness when given to prevent diphtheria. It only protects against the disease for two or three weeks. The immunizing substance is not held long in the body, and the patient becomes just as susceptible to the disease as before. Diphtheria, itself, does not render the person having had it immune from a second or even a third attack.

Toxin-Antitoxin and Toxioid

Happily, a new means for dealing with the situation became available. Toxin-Antitoxin, the preventive measure against, diptheria, was first discovered accidentally in the course of experimentation about thirty years ago.
In 1913, Park and Zingher of New York began the immunization of children in a large organized way through the injection of many localities has since conclusively demonstrated the effectiveness and harmlessness of this measure. The favorable results have been confirmed in many places in this country and abroad.

Later a modification of this came into general use, the substance used being called "Tox-iod," which is the same as Toxin-Antitoxin which need not be given here.

The administration of toxoid is a simple procedure and can be safely performed by any physician. Two hypodermic injections of the substance are given in the arm of the subject at intervals of one month between each injection.
It is but remotely related to antitoxin or toxoid will not cure diphtheria. It will prevent it, but the immunity may be some weeks in developing. Once established, the immunity will last for years and probably for life.

Toxin Should Be Given Early

Every infant between its sixth and ninth month of age is in the most favourable period to receive through toxoid. In the first place the child at this age responds most readily to the treatment, and in the second place it is entering upon that period when it is most susceptible to diphtheria, and a time when fatalities from the disease most frequently occur.

At this age diphtheria often occurs in the form known as laryngeal diphtheria or membrane croup.
In this type of disease the air passages are blocked almost from the beginning and the child runs the added risk of strangulation, or must be subjected to either the operation of opening the windpipe, called tracheotomy, or in-serting a tube into the throat by way of the mouth, called intubation. These risks add to the number of deaths.

The utilization of toxin-antitox-in and toxoid for diphtheria immunization work was considerably enhanced by the discovery of the test for susceptibility to diphtheria in 1913 by Dr. Bela Schick of Vienna (now of New York).

The Schick Test made it possible to test on a large scale the immunizing power of toxin-antitoxin and at the same time to test the duration of immunity.

Schick Test Should Be Omitted

It is considered quite un-necessary and from certain standpoints undesirable, to give the Schick test to very young children or even to older children before toxoid is administered. Nearly all children under five years and the vast majority of those between five and ten are susceptible to diphtheria. To give the test merely delays and complicates matters as well as adding to the cost of immunization work. The safer method is to give toxoid to all children first.

Toxioid will never fulfill its purpose of eradicating diphtheria if its use is limited merely to school children or to those who have previously shown a positive reaction to the Schick Test. If toxoid is to be a really effective weapon, immunization by this means must become a routine practice in the hands of family physicians.

When the simple and harmless use of toxoid for children at six months is demanded by all parents and administered by physicians to every child in a routine way, then and not till then will it be possible to wipe out diptheria.
